

Gold is often found where gold has been produced before

Where the most famous gold rushes took place, there are still high grade and rewarding properties today.

A tour through the USA through gold mines and ghost towns would certainly be a nice thing. On the trail of the gold rush through Nevada, for example. Areas where thousands set out to find gold back then, today there are not only historic hotels, museums or sights, but also active gold prospecting or producing mining companies. In Nevada, desert and steppe dominate, Las Vegas and Area 51 are located here and just also still a large amount of gold.

One gold company that is currently producing gold successfully is Fiore Gold - <https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=CJQflaxy9U0&t=342s> - with its Pan mine. Further in the portfolio of the company is a second gold project as well as a third, which contains a formerly producing mine. There was a legendary gold rush in the Yukon Territory, where nuggets were first found in large quantities near the Klondike River in the late 19th century. Emigrants flocked to the area in northwestern Canada to make their fortune. The life of the gold seekers back then was marked by risks and hardships. Today, various mining companies are bustling about here.

For example, Victoria Gold's - <https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=l8ia0H8gjmA> - Eagle gold mine in the Yukon Territory has been producing since 2019. In August, this was able to achieve a record production of almost 21,000 ounces of gold. The Eagle Gold Mine is the youngest in the former Gold Rush area.
